Ambassador Mike Huckabee criticizes Senator Chuck Schumer for failing to condemn what he characterizes as anti-Semitic remarks by Zohran Mamdani, despite Schumer's prominent position as a Jewish leader and his recent book on anti-Semitism in America.

SAŽETAK

In this commentary, Ambassador Mike Huckabee addresses Senator Chuck Schumer's response to statements by Zohran Mamdani. Huckabee notes that Schumer, as a U.S. Senator from New York and the most prominent Jewish elected official in America, recently published a book titled Anti-Semitism in America. However, Huckabee argues that Schumer has failed to condemn what he views as anti-Semitic comments from Mamdani. Huckabee characterizes this silence as cowardice and suggests that Schumer should not be regarded as a Jewish leader if he continues to remain silent on the matter. The speaker emphasizes that there is no other way to characterize Mamdani's remarks than as anti-Semitic, and he asserts that despite not being Jewish himself, he believes he is a more effective Jewish leader than someone unwilling to directly name anti-Semitism when confronted with it.
